At the Woman's Club.
Very charming and clever was the paper on "The Sonnet," read by Mrs. Landona Dashiell yesterday afternoon at the Woman's Club. Mrs. Dashiell quoted most of the different sonnets of various poets from memory and handled her subject in a very pleasing and attractive manner. She stated that the exact origin of the sonnet was unknown, but that it was a natural evolution of the lyric and decidedly Italian; that there were two kinds of sonnets—legitimate and illegitimate—the difference being a mere matter of rhyming the fourteen lines.

Sir Thomas Wyatt, in 1537, first introduced the sonnet form into England. He had been in the diplomatic service in Italy, and, like Tasso, returning from the East with the Rose of Damascus, he brought this form of verse home to the English.

Very few authors have used the legitimate form, as mighty masters are generally a law unto themselves, and one finds Shakespeare and Milton, Wordsworth, Keats and Byron and all the others, modern and otherwise, rarely conformed to the rule. Even Dante, the first great sonnet writer, or Petrarch did not violently insist on the convention, but both followed the order of the day and immortalized their respective lady loves.

ROBERT V. CHANLER

Mr. Chaloner Tells Mr. Chanler to Prepare "for Alimony Assault."

John Armstrong Chaloner, who some time ago declared that his brother, ex-Sheriff Robert Winthrop Chanler, had best put his estates in trust to prevent alimony proceedings following his announced engagement to Liza Cavallieri, the opera star and prima donna, yesterday sent from Cobham the following telegram to the bridegroom:

"Ex-Sheriff Bob Chanler, Windsor Arcade, Fifth Avenue and Forty-seventh Street, New York:
"What did I tell you? I now come to be a prophet of first water. See your great roast in yesterday's Sun. You will be as well stung up in love as ex-Lieutenant-Governor was in politics. Fancy you will no longer say I am crazy for advising you to prepare for alimony assault."

John Armstrong Chaloner is now at Merry Mills, his country home, near Cobham. The wire to his brother followed the announcement in the New York papers and in dispatches from New York giving an interview with the opera star, in which she declared that she did not love the man she intended to marry. When in Richmond, on the night announcement of the engagement was first made known, Mr. Chaloner remarked that his brother had best put his property in trust.

Leake—Dorel.
[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
Gordonsville, Va., April 18.—Miss Maude E. Dorel and Willard L. Leake were married at the home of the officiating minister, Rev. Hugh H. Hudson, at 10 o'clock Monday morning. The ceremony took place at Shenandoah, Harperstown and other points. They will make their future home in Charlottesville.

"She Loves Me, She Loves Me Not, She Loves Me," Says Chanler.

New York, April 18.—She loves me, she loves me not. She loves me not, she loves me. Wow! Big "Bob" Chanler, millionaire scion of the house of Astor, artichoke artist, former politician, athlete and wooer, sat on the edge of his Bohemian sofa in his barn-like studio in the Windsor Arcade Building. In his hand he held a worn-out paint brush, from which he was abstracting the camel's hair brushes, one at a time, something after the manner of the blushing maiden who plucks the petals from a daisy.

His long legs were sprawling out in front of him, and his artist's suit resembled the uniform of a midshipman, he accented his 25 pounds of weight and his six-foot-four length. But it was a new "Bob" Chanler—a rejuvenated "Bob." The great scraggy artist's beard had given way to a clean shave. The usually long, dark hair was neatly trimmed and parted, and there was a glow in his cheeks that proclaimed perfect health. He was supremely happy, not alone because the singer had accepted him, but likewise because there will positively be no opposition to his marriage on the part of any member of his family.

"So she loves you?" ventured the newspaper man, as the last bristle floated easily to the floor.
"Quite won't be interviewed," came the quick reply, accompanied by a smile.
"But Mrs. Cavallieri has said she would marry you, has she not?"
"Shepearsesay."
"Yes, but close friends say so, too."
"Allright, good!"
"Lovely Woman; Fine Mind."
Here the telephone rang and the happy artist hurried to answer it. He returned like a whirlwind and bounded up on the scaffolding before his huge picture.

"Finishing, great picture," he said.

"But, Mr. Chanler, you owe it to the public to tell them why you fell in love with the most beautiful woman in the world. Was it her beauty, her art, her voice, her manner?"

"Big Bob" stopped short. He rolled his large blue eyes a moment and then said softly and slowly:
"Lovely woman; fine mind; charming lady."

"And her eyes?" ventured the interviewer.

"Ah, yes, heavenly divine."

"And her voice?"

"Ah yes, such a voice!" Here the artist pointed to two large phonographs. "Great things those," he said suddenly.

"Wonderful things; when I listen to them I hear her singing."

"Isn't it true that the artistic temperament of this wonderful lady also attracted you—her work is artistic and so is yours?"

"That's right, that's right—she loves art, I love art, two doves in a cote could not task formore could they?"

"Hey! Cut That Out!"

"And I suppose because you speak Italian so beautifully and intelligently that that also had something to do with it?"

"Hey you cut out! Today you wouldn't interview me, you'd interview me. Gim me a match. This ain't no politics, nor prize bull nor Red Hook bands, nor con hunts. This is love. You'll see I don't ever come taking anything for nothing. By the way—this picture I brought out in the Grand Central depot—hadn't it?"

"But, Mr. Chanler, surely you are proud of having won the greatest beauty of the age, and—"

"Say, you're roasting the big artist, regarding the interviewer with a quizzical expression. 'What are you trying to do? Let's talk about farming, or how I licked Bob Hunter. Love is love, and ain't it fair to make a match. Solong.'"

Without doubt the affianced husband of Liza Cavallieri is the unique rich man in the country. He is a millionaire, the fact that his talk is always a running fire of words, he possesses a wonderful lot of philosophy and an endless fund of good humor. His friends never doubted when he set out to win the great opera singer that it would end just as it has—that he would win. "Bob" Chanler is a fighter.

Nothing much was heard of him until he began his crusade against a corrupt Republican ring in Dutchess county in 1895. Every trick known to the art of politics was tried against him, but without success. The last trick was a gerrymander. When the big millionaire awoke one morning and found his ancestral home gerrymandered out of the district, he packed his trunks and moved to another town.

Then he began a unique campaign. He bought prize bulls and prize stallions and let the farmers know that the stock that was at their command. Frequently he would parade his prizes through his home village led by a band that he had organized and uniformed.

When he bought one of the most expensive baseball bats in the country and gave free baseball.

Incidentally, he spent thousands of dollars, but uprooted the ring he had started after. Oldtimers have him indexed as one of the shrewdest politicians that have been developed in many years hence.

Democratic All Times.

Apart from politics and art, his social side is still more amazing. His democracy reaches beyond belief. He attended once upon a time to have functions of the year in a full dress suit, wearing a flannel shirt. He owns a big farm in Red Hook, upon which he frequently pitches hay and milks his prize bulls in the morning and slide into the kitchen door of some humble farmhouse, where he will eat buckwheat cakes and sausages at the kitchen table.

One day a joke is still more wonderful. One day, during one of his campaigns, a friend entered his apartment and found the big politician doing a literal war dance around the room, laughing and throwing his arms about in a alarming manner.

"Just played a joke on a fellow," he roared.

"What is the joke?" was asked.

"Oh, I owed a fellow a bill—$500. Lawyer sued me—thought I was broke—income just gone dry. Sent him a check. Wow! he had his cane with him, that for a joke? Bunch thought they were hurt me by bringing suit. Fooled 'em all."

Those who know Mr. Chanler best say that had the opera singer refused him he would not have been on his high seas, nothing daunted, on his way to plead his cause anew.

New Dress Linens

Lower Than Ever Before

Linens, both white and colored, are as popular this season as last. Foreseeing this we purchased early in August our elegant stock of these goods, and at prices which enable us to make lower figures for same goods than prevailed last season. For instance, those attractive "Pongee" Linens, which sold readily last season at 29c, are now 25c per yard. Yard wide Crashes, which were hard to get last season to sell for 48c, are this season 35c, while better goods in 45-inch width, are 48c, they last season selling at 63c. This is greatly due to our early purchases as every one of these are from 10 to 20 per cent. higher now than when purchased. In colors we have all the desirable colors and shades.

In White Linens our stock never was so well and reasonably supplied. A special in 10-4 Linen Sheet at 69c.

PUBLICITY BILL PASSED BY HOUSE

Mann, of Illinois, Casts Only Vote Against Campaign Measure.

Washington, April 18.—With Representative Mann, of Illinois, alone voting in the negative, the House today passed the McCall campaign publicity bill.

Only a short time was required to pass the publicity measure. Twenty minutes was allowed for debate on each side, but only Mr. Mann spoke or voted in opposition. He declared that, like the Sherman anti-trust act, it would be found that the provisions of the bill would far exceed the purposes of its advocates.

As worded, he insisted that it required such associations as the Rivers and Harbors Congress and newspapers owned by individuals to make public the receipts and expenditures of their business. Members of the House, he said, later would be found explaining that they did not understand the scope of the law they were enacting. To these objections little attention was paid, while Gaines, of West Virginia, said that the measure was a "Rucker" of Missouri; Conroy, of New York, and Feters, of Massachusetts, delivered vigorous speeches in support of the measure. When the viva voce vote was taken on the passage of the measure a vast chorus of "yays" was followed by a single "no" by Mr. Mann.
